What you get?

What is Neuroticism?

You can observe the personality of each person in how he/she acts, how he/she experiences different situations and also how he/she thinks. Each personality is original. Each of us is an individual with our own characteristics, way of acting and thinking. Personality traits are relatively constant, so it is often possible to predict how we will behave or feel in certain situations.

Personality traits

Each personality is a summary of different characteristics. These characteristics and traits are manifested mainly in the way we act. They are characteristic of our personality and do not change much. The most used model of traits consists of five basic traits and their opposites: Openness to experience - curiosity, ingenuity x caution; Conscientiousness - carefulness x carelessness; Extraversion - initiative, openness, sociability x restraint, loneliness; Agreeableness - friendliness, compassion x cold; Neuroticism - emotional stability x neuroticism.

Neuroticism

Usually, her reaction is calm and without significant emotional manifestations. She can react in this way even in situations that are commonly understood as stressful. She has the ability to keep her head and not succumb to short-term thinking or hasty reactions and manifestations. She is not worried about what she cannot control. Even if she is experiencing tension, she does not show it (her hands do not sweat, her voice does not tremble). She has no problem dealing with strangers. She does not succumb to trepidation. She is therefore a resilient, emotionally prudent and stable person. She has no significant characteristic in this section.

Extraversion

Her high values of extraversion show how very sociable a person she is. She likes society and people in general. She likes to be anywhere something is going on. She has no problem asserting herself among strangers. People often remember her. She adapts to changes quickly, she has no problem talking on any topic. Sometimes she can act hastily. Because she is usually full of energy, she can sometimes lead to misjudgment. "First I act and then I think". In society, she is sought after and welcomed. She might be sought after for advice or to resolve conflicts. She has no problem with criticism and feedback. She is aware of her own emotions and can observe the emotions of others. Some reactions and tendencies may be of an erratic nature, of which she is aware. Her main characteristics are: "Very strong trait: Gregariousness (Sociality)", "Strong trait: Activity Level (Energy, Activeness)". You can find out more in the following chapters.

What is Extraversion? ▾

Very strong trait: Gregariousness (Sociality)

She is a collective person. She likes groups around her, whether friends or a team of co-workers. She likes to be surrounded by people, and draws energy and ideas from them. Group thinking makes her own thinking easier. She likes the energy that emerges from groups of people.
